Unhappily Ever Now is the alternative, industrial, and progressive metal project founded by Cleopatra Records (Green Jelly) songwriter Stephen Watson and is composed of Stephen Watson (lead performer and songwriter) and Maria V (vocals, lyrics, and melodies).

Their music is driven by complex and ambitious compositions inspired by bands such as Stabbing Westward, TOOL, and A Perfect Circle, among others.

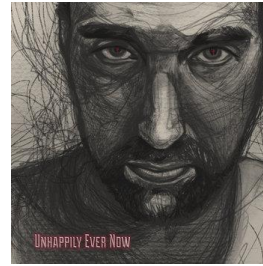

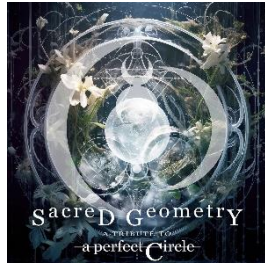

While Stephen's work with Green Jelly contributing to the Cleopatra Records album, Garbage Band Kids ("Hey Hey Hey"), is carefree and intended to be humorous, his work with Unhappily Ever Now is much more serious, brooding, and critical of the human condition.

The band name and themes are heavily inspired and influenced by Stephen's favorite TV show, 12 Monkeys (Syfy), and explore the deep-seated sadness that not only have we lost our ability as a society to coexist with each other and to be happy in the NOW, but that we've lost so much along the way -- our pets, family, friends, partners, relationships, homes and jobs.

We seem to be stuck unhappily ever in our NOW, and themes of watching us struggle to survive, losing our place in time, and not having the chance to say goodbye, are prominent in Unhappily Ever Now's music.
